"Jennifer gave me a game plan to prepare for public speaking engagements. Before that, I was lost. Now I have a routine that helps me feel better going into high stakes public speaking situations."

Jennifer's deep empathy for terrified speakers stems from her own intense struggles as an introvert who used to get physically sick before presenting in meetings or teaching university classes in public speaking.

Over the course of two decades, she's developed exercises and strategies that have helped her and thousands of clients change their ingrained habits, fears, and patterns of inner dialogue so they can stand up and speak up with ease and confidence.

"When I was invited to give a TALK AT GOOGLE, Jennifer helped me map out my talk, work on my presentation style, focus on the most important things I had to say, and leave out the stuff that is interesting but irrelevant."

EVER FEEL LIKE YOU MIGHT THROW UP BEFORE SPEAKING IN PUBLIC?

"I was experiencing extreme nervousness while speaking in certain settings—not good for a senior executive. I was concerned that the company was losing faith in my leadership abilities. After just one session, I began feeling more confident and started putting the teachings into practice."
